

David Petrosian

Still life Reflection :)

The vinyl albums I had in my still life are meant to represent my beliefs and interests (also you can't see it in the still life because it is unfinished but the bottom album is an album with a song called Memento Mori). I also just really like the albums I put (Pink Floyd's The Wall & Will Wood's The Normal Album). The book, Thus spoke Kishibe Rohan, is meant to represent my interests and the types of media I consume. The apple is meant to represent the life of people. I also added a camcorder because I wanted to show my love for older tech and media. The Wall-E plush is meant to represent the childish joy and whimsy in my heart. I also wanted to make the whole thing almost symmetrical to show how I am this perfectionist that isn't able to achieve perfection (yk because it's impossible to be perfect). The hardest part for me was figuring out how to mix the colors, I spent way too much on that. If I had just used some of the premade colors or accepted some of the other ones I had already mixed. The second hardest thing to deal with was probably procrastination. Also, our table didn't have any white paint for the entire time we had acrylic paint and our entire table was too shy to ask other people until like day 3 or 4 of the still life project. I also could have done better on my values. I wish I would have been able to finish it because I would have been more proud of my still life if it was finished.